As a parent, I understand peoples concern about violence, language, and nudity on t.v.. My comment is for the upcoming showing of "Saving Private Ryan". I think the network should be allowed to show the movie, the way it was meant to be viewed. They're wanting to show this movie on Veteran's Day, not just any regular day, but a day to show respect and thanks for what others had to endure for our freedom. If someone dosen't want their kids to watch the movie, then they can turn the channel and have them watch something else. Children learn about history in school, to a point. This is a part of our history and it helps keep people from growing up blind to what has happened in the past. I would allow my child to watch this movie, I fully support the airing of this movie, and I would hope others support it as well. Many men and women have died for our country and as a sign of thanks, you should allow this to be shown without any fines being sent out. GOD BLESS AMERICA!
